MATERIAL DEFECTS

IVANO BAZENI is liable for material defects of the product until the moment of transfer of risk to the Buyer.

It is also liable for those material defects that appear after the transfer of risk to the Buyer if they are the result of a cause that existed before that. A defect that appeared within one year from the transfer of risk to the Buyer is considered to have existed at the time of transfer of risk, unless the Seller proves otherwise or the contrary arises from the nature of the item or the nature of the defect.

A defect exists:

- if the item does not correspond to the description, type, quantity and quality, or does not have the functionality, compatibility, interoperability and other features as determined by the purchase contract
- if the item is not suitable for any specific purpose for which it is needed by the Buyer and with which the Buyer has informed the Seller at the latest at the time of conclusion of the contract and in relation to which the Seller has given its consent.
- if the item is not delivered with all accessories and instructions, including installation instructions, as specified in the sales contract or if the item is not delivered with updates as specified in the sales contract,
- if the item is not suitable for use for the purposes for which an item of the same type would normally be used, taking into account all European Union and Croatian regulations, technical standards or, in the absence of such technical standards, applicable codes of conduct in a particular area, if they exist,
- if the item does not correspond to the quality and description of the sample or model that the seller made available to the buyer before the conclusion of the contract
- if the item is not delivered with additional equipment, including packaging, installation instructions or other instructions, the receipt of which the buyer can reasonably expect
- if the item does not correspond to the quantity or does not have the properties and other characteristics, including those relating to durability, functionality, compatibility and safety, that are usual for an item of the same type and that the buyer can reasonably expect having regard to the nature of the item and taking into account any public statements made by the seller or other persons in the previous stages of the chain of transactions, including the manufacturer or made on their behalf, in particular in advertising or labelling
- if the item was incorrectly installed or assembled, and the installation or assembly service forms part of the purchase contract and was carried out by the seller or a person for whom he is responsible
- if the item that was intended to be installed or assembled by the buyer was incorrectly installed or assembled by the buyer, and the incorrect installation or assembly is the result of a deficiency in the instructions provided by the seller or, in the case of items with digital content elements provided by the seller or supplier of the digital content or digital service.

The buyer is obliged to notify the seller of the existence of visible defects within two months from the date of discovery of the defect, and no later than two years from the transfer of risk to the consumer.

The seller is not liable for defects that become apparent after two years have passed since the delivery of the item. The rights of the buyer who has notified the seller of the existence of the defect in a timely manner shall expire after two years, counting from the date of sending the notification to the seller, unless the buyer was prevented from exercising them by the seller's fraud.

If the existence of a material defect is determined, the seller may have one of the following obligations, all in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Obligations Act:

- removal of the defect
- delivery of another product without the defect
- price reduction
- termination of the contract

Rights based on a material defect in a product are regulated by the Obligations Act.

The buyer may terminate the contract only if he has previously given the seller a subsequent appropriate deadline for fulfillment.

The buyer may terminate the contract without setting a subsequent deadline if the seller, after being notified of the defects, has informed him that he will not fulfill the contract or if it is obvious from the circumstances of the specific case that the seller will not be able to fulfill the contract even within the subsequent deadline, as well as in the case where the buyer cannot achieve the purpose for which he concluded the contract due to the seller's delay.

If the seller fails to fulfill the contract within the subsequent deadline, it is terminated by law, but the buyer may maintain it if he declares to the seller without delay that he is maintaining the contract in force.

The seller has the right to refuse to remove the defect if repair and replacement are impossible or would cause him disproportionate costs, taking into account all the circumstances, in particular the value of the thing without the defect, the significance of the defect and the question of whether the repair or replacement can be carried out without significant inconvenience to the buyer.

When the buyer is a legal entity, the rules on material deficiency prescribed by the Civil Obligations Act apply to them, especially in the part where material deficiency for legal entities is regulated differently than stated here in the Terms of Use, then the Civil Obligations Act applies.

If regular delivery of the goods has been agreed over a certain period, the 14-day period begins on the day on which the consumer or a third party designated by the consumer, who is not the carrier, has received the first piece or the first shipment of the product.

If the consumer is not informed of the right to terminate the contract, the consumer's right to unilaterally terminate the contract shall expire 12 months after the expiry of the 14-day period.

If the seller has provided the consumer with notice of the right to terminate the contract within 12 months, the right to unilaterally terminate the contract shall expire 14 days after the consumer has received that notice.
